SANCTUM
Gjertrud Hals

7 February - 25 April, 2020

From February 7 to April 25, 2020, Galerie Maria Wettergren presents the solo exhibition Sanctum by the pioneering textile artist, Gjertrud Hals (b. 1948, Norway). Over the past twenty years, Hals has visited and collected inspiration from “places marked by rites, myths or by significant events”, such as Varanasi, Mount Sinai, Kyoto, or the Forbidden City.

The souls of these places (anima locus) form the core of this exhibition, in which Hals shows her most recent works, made from various types of metal and fibers. Chosen for their intrinsic beauty, Hals composes with materials from recycling sites or objects found on the beach or on the roadside, such as the reddish copper wire of electrical cables, the ring-pulls of beer cans, a fragment from a clock, or a piece of plastic jewelry...The artist weaves, knits and hammers these so-called poor materials delicately like a goldsmith, transforming them into refined grids, vibrating sculptures, poetic dream-catchers. Through her delicate yet powerful works, this ‘artist-chemist’ shares with us her personal wonder at metamorphosis, whether it is a material that she transfigures from waste into art, or a culture she elevates from low into high, all the while maintaining a trace of its original state.

Gjertrud Hals is considered as an important pioneer in the field of Scandinavian textile art. She has been one of the redefining figures by liberating textile art from the loom and displaying it in space as three-dimensional sculpture. Born in 1948 on the island of Finnøya, her upbringing on this little island is profoundly anchored in her art, and her relationship to the region’s nature and culture is deep and complex. The Nordic mythology is a great source of inspiration to the artist, but it was her interest in feminism and women’s culture that drew her, in the 1980s, towards the new wave of women artists exploring the sculptural potential of “fiber art”, such as Sheila Hicks, Claire Zesler et Magdalena Abakanowicz.

Hals’ works have been acquired by private and public collections, such as Mobilier National / Les Gobelins, France; National Museum of Contemporary Art, Oslo; American Craft Museum, New York; The Museum of Decorative Arts, Lausanne; and The Bellerive Museum, Zürich.

"Eir, the Norwegian word for copper rust, is pointing to one of the characteristics of copper. The dark, burnt wire from dynamos and motors is used together with the shiny, unburnt wire from electric cables. Eir also has a link to Norse Mythology, as it is the name of one of the goddesses. At the same time, their shape reminds of the lanterns in a Buddhist Temple, as well as the pendant lights in a Christian Church." G.H

Connecting and binding together characterise Gjertrud Hals' art, both literally and symbolically. Many of her works are grid structures made of fibres or metal thread. Often little objects, objets trouvés, are added alongside with plastic capsules or embroideries from India or made by her grandmother. They look a bit like the kind of "treasures" children find. Like a spider's web, these weavings seem to capture the traces of life as time goes by. Like small micro-cosmoses, inspired by mythological story-telling and children's worlds, Gjertrud Hals' works seem to possess their own laws and logics, moving somewhere between delicate neatness and unrestrained inspiration. In the words of the artist, they propose a reflection "... on the relationship between nature and culture, in which the lives of modern humans are moving between chaos and order. Forces of nature and war create chaos, after which a new order is elaborated, always both the same and a little bit different than the previous.

Gjertrud Hals works tirelessly, always seeking out new experiences. She has constantly explored new techniques, as she weaves, knits, casts, sprays and cuts her way through various materials, mostly natural fibres or metal threads, that she elaborates during physical and time-consuming sessions. Her inspiration comes from her frequent travels to Japan, where she admires the ancient Shinto temples and learns to make paper. The Japanese word kami actually means both paper and for God, and it is the discovery of Japan's old nature-worshipping religion, Shintoism, that puts nature at the heart of Gjertrud Hals' work. For her, nature is not just an inspiration, but small pieces of natural life that she often draws into her works in a direct manner. "With all that is happening in the world today, it feels right to focus on a small segment by conserving a small part of it. It reminds me of my collections of shells and insects from my childhood. It has always given me great pleasure to create order out of chaos."

It is also Shintoism that has opened her eyes for Norse mythology. She is struck by the feeling that so many things in today's culture are rooted in these stories. In the documentary Black Sun, the artist explains her spiritual approach to art and techniques, "Over the past 25 years, I've had a fling with Zen Buddhism. It focuses on technique but not for show. It's a continued technical exercise. You should exercise so much that you forget the technique. And, in the end, yourself ... Zen Buddhism is very down to earth. It's about getting in touch with your inner child, and that reminds me of things I know from way back in my culture ... my background ... Christianity ... and the essence of the New Testament. Several times, in the Gospels of Matthew and Mark, Jesus says that if you don't become a child again, you're not allowed into the kingdom of heaven. In that way, there is something in common ... this simple down-to-earth mysticism. You can't get there by keeping a safe distance. You must get into it, take part in it." (Black Sun, movie).

"In life, we meet a cross when we have to choose between several directions, a crossroad for example, and it is a frequently used symbol in folklore and Scandinavian folk art. The cross with four equal arms was often on bridal coverlets or cloths that were used at rites of christening and burial. Such crosses are also known to several pre-Christian cultures. I have also often seen them on my Orient travels. Some scholars in these fields point at the static energy and the harmony of the equal-armed cross, and consider it as a sacral crossroad of vertical and horizontal dimensions, or even a symbol of "the sacred place" itself." G.H.

It is all about finding your inner child ... getting into it, forgetting to keep a safe distance, being ALL IN, like a child - shipwrecks, spiders' webs, snakes, animal skeletons and all. Chaos and order. Joy mixed with terror. Combining big and small, high and low, Gjertrud Hals mixes auto-biographical and feminist themes with legendary story-telling, folk art and fine art, profane and sacred ... a simple down-to-earth mysticism, as she calls it, that beckons the child in us all.

Trained in the art of tapestry-weaving in the 1970's, Gjertrud Hals' interest in feminism and women's culture associates her with the new Polish wave of women artists exploring the sculptural potential of textile. The word fiber art appeared in the United States in the 1960's, and the first fiber art exhibition ("Woven Forms") took place in 1963 in New York at the Museum of Contemporary Crafts. Previously, this style had been referred to as "off-loom", and it is the process of binding elements together which comes from weaving that is the common denominator of fiber art.

"In 2007, I went on a pilgrimage in Japan with two colleges. We planned to walk on foot to the 88 Zen-Buddhist temples on Shikoku. However, after 24 temples, I strained my leg, and I had to continue on my own by bus, train and careful walking. I got plenty of time to look around and pick up interesting items, like tabs from beverage cans. The Coca-Cola and Kirin vending-machines were everywhere, also in the temples. In retrospect, they stand before me as inseparable parts of the sacred temples!" G.H.
